Dear Brothers:

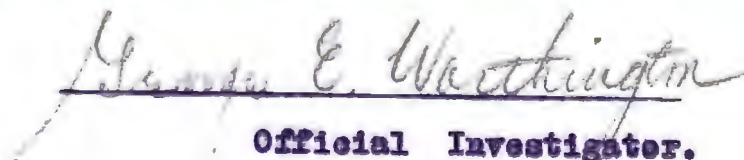

I am presenting for consideration my report of the men who are petitioning you for a Chapter at the University of Washington. Before doing so, I wish to give my unbiased opinion of the University.

The University is by far the strongest school in the northwest. It has over 2,000 students, and its requirements and standards are very high. The school has quite recently began to grow quite rapidly. There are yet but twelve national fraternities here, the oldest being about ten years old. Now is one of the most opportune times to found a Chapter here. The Chapter will be bound to share in the rapid growth of the school and consequently the strength of its position will be assured.

The men who are petitioning are sturdy westerners, - a strong type of men who are well fitted to be Charter members of a Chapter. They are morally clean and men who I am positive will make good Sigs. They have elected officers and are most ardent in their interest in the embryo Chapter.

I cannot speak too highly of the men, and I gladly recommend them as worthy of receiving a Charter. Hoping that their petition receives an early and favorable reply, I remain,

Fraternaly yours in Alpha Sigma Phi,

I N S T I T U T I O N .

University of Washington.

Seattle, Washington.

The University of Washington was founded by an act of the territorial legislature in 1861 on a ten acre tract of land donated by benevolent citizens from their farms adjoining the small village of Seattle. This plot of land is today covered by large downtown business blocks, and in the years to come will prove a great source of revenue for the maintenance of the University.

During the latter years of the territorial period and the first years of statehood (1885 - 1895) the old quarters of the University became very crowded, and those most interested in the welfare of the college began to cast about for a more suitable location. Their efforts bore fruit in 1893 in shape of an act by the State legislature which provided for a new University site comprising 355 acres of land bordering on Lakes Washington and Union about thirty minutes ride from the heart of the City. At the same time it also provided sufficient money to build new structures of a permanent character and adequate for the needs of the growing institution.

On September 4, 1895 the institution moved into the new buildings and since then the progress of the University has more than kept pace with the rapid development of the commonwealth.

In 1909 the Alaska-Yukon- Pacific Exposition was given the use of part of the campus upon consideration that certain buildings of a permanent character would be constructed, and that these buildings, at the close of the Exposition, would revert to the University. As a result of this agreement Washington has obtained many substantial and beautiful structures, and a campus infinitely more attractive by reason of the expert landscape gardening lavished upon it by the Exposition authorities.

Much might be said of Washington's achievements in its last period of growth. In athletics it ranks second to none on the Pacific Coast. Also its many victories in the forensic field, fill a very interesting page in University History.

Washington last November celebrated its fiftieth anniversary, which was attended by prominent educators from all over the United States. At this time Dr. Kendric Charles Babcock of the United States Bureau of Education ranked the University of Washington as an institution of the first class.

Washington's future is indeed bright.
